Hanover Partnership for Schools and Academies appoints EdisonLearning as Schools Delivery Partner

Colchester, UK. June 7th, 2010 – EdisonLearning has been appointed as the educational services delivery partner for the Hanover Partnership for Schools and Academies. Hanover will utilise EdisonLearning's experience and expertise in the design, organisation and operation of schools in the UK and internationally to assist in the creation of a new schools group, offering a highly distinctive education that combines academic excellence with the development of essential employability and personal skills.

Hanover Partnership for Schools and Academies is committed to developing all-through schools wherever possible, and to developing strong networks of primary and secondary schools.

EdisonLearning's fund of experience in creating and developing networks that help schools to provide mutual support and share best practice is a key element in the strategy.

“The need for a consistently strong academic education has never been greater,” said EdisonLearning's Managing Director, Paul Lincoln. “However, we believe that education in the 21st century should not be limited only to academic outcomes: employers are seeking young people with strong employability skills, and, together with Hanover, we are well positioned to provide a new model of education which fully meets these needs.”

Designed to improve standards across a range of measures, EdisonLearning's work is based in a holistic approach to school development. EdisonLearning currently works with around 100 schools in the UK and the Middle East, and is the largest provider of educational services in the USA, delivering innovative school improvement services, solutions for school management, and strategic education advice to support the implementation of national education priorities.

About EdisonLearning

EdisonLearning provides uniquely holistic services and programmes for school improvement, Academy management, BSF planning and implementation, curriculum development and personalised learning. Working through a process of consultancy, coaching and innovation, EdisonLearning provides a complete package of services and technologies to help schools achieve lasting improvements. EdisonLearning's educational vision is anchored in a research-based school 'design' of best practice combined with continuous professional development, integrated use of diagnostic assessment systems and learning technologies, to provide an all-encompassing school improvement package that enables any school to reach its potential.
